Handbook on the Law of Negotiable Instruments Leonard Gering 2007 This is the last work of the late Leonard Gering who for decades has been an authoritative voice on the law of negotiable instruments, a subject described as notoriously difficult, which view is echoed by the learned Chief Justice in the foreword of this book. This work, like its two predecessors, is divided into two parts. Part One sets out in a clearly understandable manner the main principles underlying the law of negotiable instruments. Part Two contains the text of the Bills of Exchange Act 34 of 1964 (as amended by Act 56 of 2000) and conveniently and methodically deals consecutively with each section accompanied by a detailed commentary thereon.

The Negotiable Instruments Law Annotated Joseph Doddridge Brannan 2017-09-17 Excerpt from The Negotiable Instruments Law Annotated: With References to the English Bills of Exchange Act and With the Cases Under the Negotiable Instruments Law and the Bills of Exchange Act and Comments Thereon; Together With Comments and Criticisms the Negotiable Instruments Law An Appendix sets forth such provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act as have not been adopted by the Negotiable Instruments Law and have not already been mentioned or quoted in the notes to the Negotiable Instruments Law. Tables of the corresponding sections of the two statutes are also given in an Appendix. The fact that a provision is to be found in the one statute, but not in the other, does not necessarily mean that the principle set forth in 'such provision is not the law in the other country, for both statutes contain provisions to cover such omissions, the Bills of Exchange Act providing in section 97 (2) that the rules of common law, including the law merchant, save so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, shall continue to apply to bills of exchange, promissory notes, and checks, and the Negotiable Instruments Law providing in section 196 that in any cases not provided for in this act the rules of the law merchant shall govern.
